Facilitating dialogue and deliberation

Oliver Escobar

Lecturer in Public Policy, University of Edinburgh

Thousands of local public forums take place every day across communities in Scotland. The purposes of these forums vary, from sharing information and networking, to consulting on, or co-producing, policies and services. One of the most challenging aspects of organising and facilitating such public forums is to ensure that they entail meaningful and inclusive conversations that can make a difference. This participative workshop focused on how to facilitate substantial dialogue and deliberation by drawing on learning from communication studies and mediation practices.
